

Come work with us

Ignite curiosity and shape the future

ABOUT US

We are the world's leading museum of urban transport and an award-winning day out. But that's just part of our story. We are passionate. We are curious. We are adventurers.

Our aims

OUR MISSION IS TO:

- Preserve London's transport history and heritage
- Celebrate and explore the stories of people who shape London
- Create experiences that stretch, grow and inspire the next generation

Our experiences

As a heritage and education charity, we fire imaginations. Our creative spirit underpins everything we do.

Every year, we work with thousands of young people, business partners and industry decision-makers to influence London's future.

We reach more than 100,000 school children a year through our programmes, igniting curiosity among tomorrow's engineers, designers, scientists and arts enthusiasts.

We want to close the skills gap, redress gender imbalance and create opportunities for the city's under-represented and disadvantaged communities.

Alongside this, our thought leadership initiatives, business link-ups and public programmes tackle topics such as smart cities and green innovation – issues that matter to London.

Our popular Hidden London tours explore 'forgotten' parts of the Tube network and take people behind the scenes at some of London's busiest stations.

Our collections

Of course, transport is our bread and butter – our iconic brand is recognised globally and we are guardians of world-class collections.

For the 400,000 visitors who pass through our Covent Garden doors every year, we offer a glimpse into our city's unique past. In west London, our state-of-the-art Museum Depot at Acton houses the majority of the 500,000 objects in the collection, which includes both expected and surprising items.

Did you know that we look after one of the world's best collections of posters, spanning more than a century of graphic design? Online, our vast array of digital records and images allow people to share our story anytime, anywhere.

Our people and partners

For us, it's people who make the difference. Our diverse team of around 120 employees includes interns and young professionals on skills development schemes. We share our expertise, they bring fresh ideas.

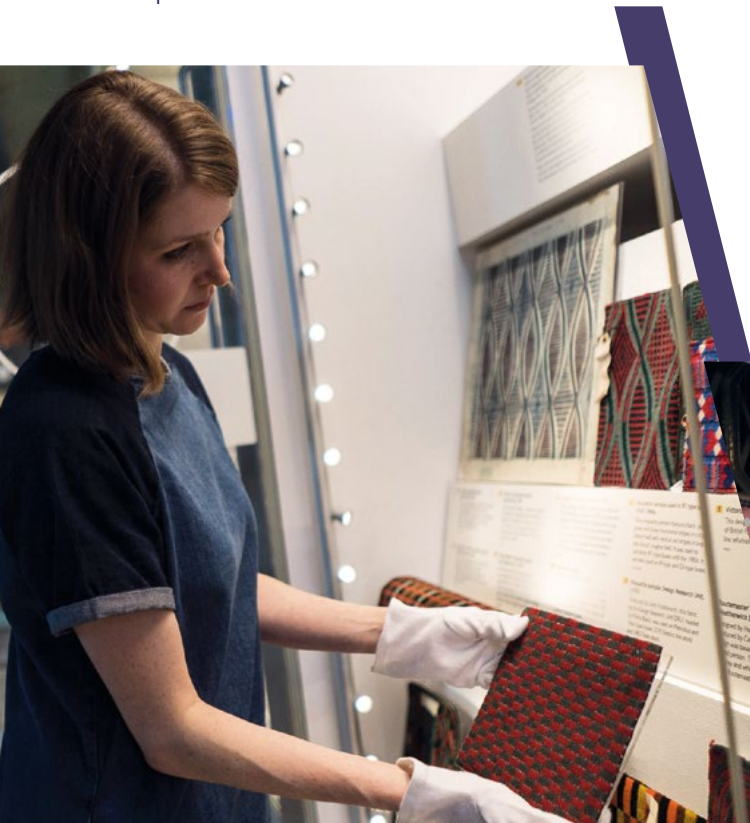

Our volunteers donate around 24,000 hours a year to our work and we are proud of our Investing in Volunteers accreditation. Other supporters include our patrons, corporate partners and sponsors, trusts and foundations. We could not achieve our plans without vital backing from the Heritage Lottery Fund, Arts Council England and our parent organisation, Transport for London.

Our future

No other capital city has been defined and shaped by transport the way London has. We will continue to use the past to inform our future.

Our vision includes new commercial and retail opportunities, partnerships, products, events and programmes. We want to become more diverse, reach new audiences across the capital and welcome more visitors.

Most importantly, we want to generate extra income to meet our funding challenges and realise our ambitions.

The London bus that went to war

To commemorate the centenary of the first motor bus, the first London Transport motor bus, the B-type, has been restored into working condition. It was successful in its role as a war-time transport.

The B-type was the first mass-produced motor bus, introduced in 1914 by the London General Omnibus Company. It was successful in its role as a war-time transport.
